The Department of Education

The United States Department of Education, is a Cabinet-level department of the United States government. The primary functions of the Department of Education are to "establish policy for, administer and coordinate most federal assistance to education, collect data on US schools, and to enforce federal educational laws regarding privacy and civil rights."

Unlike the systems of most other countries, education in the U.S. is highly decentralized, and the Department of Education are not heavily involved in determining curricula or educational standards (with the recent exceptions of the No Child Left Behind Act and the Common Core State Standards Initiative). This has been left to state and local school districts. The quality of educational institutions is maintained through an informal private process known as accreditation, over which the Department of Education has no direct public jurisdictional control. It is by far the smallest Cabinet-level department, with about 5,000 employees and an annual budget of about US$73 Billion.

What We Want:

1. The formation of New Education Zones.

2. The enactment of the Operation Top Student program.

3. The enactment of the College Road to Success program.

4. A refiguring of the financing of public schools since the advent of the national lottery system.

5. An immediate end to the disparate suspension and expulsion of Black students in public schools.

The Supreme Court

The Supreme Court of the United States (sometimes colloquially known as "SCOTUS"[1]) is the highest federal court of the United States. Established pursuant to Article III of the United States Constitution in 1789, it has ultimate (and largely discretionary) appellate jurisdiction over all federal courts and over state court cases involving issues of federal law, plus original jurisdiction over a small range of cases. In the legal system of the United States, the Supreme Court is the final interpreter of federal constitutional law, although it may only act within the context of a case in which it has jurisdiction.

What We Want:

1. The Creation of Legacy Acts.

2. The Voting Rights Act full reinstatement.

3. No more life tenures for Supreme Court Judges.

4. An immediate end to the assault on our Civil & Human Rights.

The White House

The President of the United States of America (POTUS) is the elected head of state and head of government of the United States. The president leads the executive branch of the federal government and is the commander-in-chief of the United States Armed Forces. The office of the president holds significant hard and soft power both in the United States and abroad.

Article II of the U.S. Constitution vests the executive power of the United States in the president. The power includes execution of federal law, alongside the responsibility of appointing federal executive, diplomatic, regulatory and judicial officers, and concluding treaties with foreign powers with the advice and consent of the Senate. The president also directs the foreign and domestic policy of the United States. Since the founding of the United States, the power of the president and the federal government has grown substantially.

What We Want:

1. Government for the people by the people.

2. The help of the President in solving America's real problems.

3. A President that will strongly assist in ending discrimination in America.

4. A President that will bravely and justly stand up for the full American people.

5. A President that will effectively communicate with and listen to the American people.
